An ancient game has traveled across the ocean to Upland, where it is practiced in the back room of a local pub.

The game, which began in medieval days, has long been played in basements and at outdoor picnics, but it is achieving new popularity as both an amateur and professional sport.

The game is darts.

Upland has its own team, the Black Watch, named after the pub in which it plays its home matches. The team, made up of four players and two alternates, is all men. Women usually have their own teams, according to Steve Whiteley, a San Dimas resident and team member.

Whiteley began playing darts in the pub his father managed in England when he was 16 years old.

A pub is a British bar with a difference: families gather there and children and teen-agers can join in the games and food, but not the drink. So, English lads like Whiteley got a head start over their American counterparts on darts.

In fact, Whiteley was in the states for a year before he found a darts league.

"I was shocked," he said. "Most people in America think of a dart board as something in their garage or basement that they throw something at every once in awhile."

But darts in the United States is enjoying increasing popularity. Whiteley's league, the Foothill Darts Association, which stretches from Covina to Upland, has about 400 members, he said. In Upland alone, he estimates, there are about 200 players.

Tom Fleetwood of Bellflower, who founded the Southern California chapter of the American Darts Organization, the governing body of darts in this country, said that the sport brought to the United States by the British has grown phenomenally — by at least 50 percent annually over the last ten years.

The sport is popular in Southern California, particularly in Santa Monica, which is sometimes called the "Darts capitol of the United States."

Fleetwood said that's probably because of the large percentage of British settlers there.

"Darts will be the next big thing," Whiteley predicts.

At the Black Watch Pub it already is. The English-style pub is tucked in a shopping center on the outskirts of the city on Central Avenue. With tartans hung across the back of the bar, it's not hard to guess at the Scottish origins of its owners Hal and Mary Law.

A menu that includes fish and chips and bangers and mash is another clue that they're from the British Isle. And if that isn't enough, there is the back room where the dedicated go to play darts.

That's where the Black Watch Team — of which Whiteley is a member — plays its home matches. The team of six — four regulars and two alternates — is in first place at the halfway point of the league tournament.

The team hasn't done too shabbily in past years either, as evidenced by various plaques lining the walls of the dart room between the British flag or the "Union Jack" and posters of Australia.

One wall is devoted to top-of-the-line pig-bristle dartboards on which the Black Watch team members make their winning scores during home games. The team also goes to other bars in the area to face opponents.

Darts are almost always played at pubs or bars, Whiteley explained.

"It's basically the social atmosphere," he said. "It's not the beer. It's not the drink. It's the people."

But at the same time, dart players take themselves seriously. In addition to league tournaments there are regional tournaments that the players can enter as individuals or in pairs. The purses for these events are not to be sneezed at. In Southern California alone there is more than $1 million in prize money floating around this year, Fleetwood said.

The highlight of the year for the dart players who gather at the Black Watch is the North American Open in Las Vegas. The prizes there total $50,000, but best of all the finalists get to play on stage and are televised.

"We're deadly serious. This is not just a hobby," said Whiteley, who practices four times a week. The average dart player has at least two sessions a week, he added.

It looks like all that practice is paying off because the Black Watch team wound up winning its match again last week. □

"Deputy Elk," the Rancho Cucamonga sheriff's substation's latest crime prevention "officer," demonstrates before students at Los Amigos Elementary School. The robot was donated by the city's Elks Club.

'Deputy Elk,' a remote car, joins sheriff's office

By Lori Moody

The latest rookie to join the sheriff's Rancho Cucamonga substation is short and chubby with big, black eyes; he likes kids and pops wheelies when the boss isn't looking.

"Deputy Elk," is a battery-operated, remote-controlled "robot" replica of a sheriff's patrol car. It was donated by the Rancho Cucamonga Elks Lodge as a crime prevention tool for children.

The 60-pound, 37-inch-high talking car, also known as R.C., will be used at local elementary schools for such programs as beware of strangers, safe walking and traffic safety.

The $4,000 vehicle, which comes equipped with a red and blue flashing light, siren, winking eyes and beaming headlights, was formally presented at a press conference Wednesday to Sheriff Floyd Tidwell at the Elk's Lodge on Baker Avenue.

The "robot" is the first of its type in use in San Bernardino County. The Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department obtained a similar vehicle last year, crime prevention specialist Denise Garland said.

The miniature patrol car cruises at a top speed of about 5 mph. A cassette player inside the auto plays such tunes as the theme song to the television series, "Hill Street Blues."

But as any car owner is familiar with, this one experienced some mechanical trouble. However, after several "mechanics" inspected under the hood, all it turned out to be was a blown fuse.

The car fared better Thursday when it was introduced to students during Career Day at Los Amigos Elementary School in Rancho Cucamonga.

Deputy Elk was kept busy fielding questions, such as what sex it is (a boy, according to the responding masculine voice), and if he has ever nabbed anyone (not yet, he's new). One boy wanted to know if the car had a smog check recently (no response).

When asked by a reporter to comment on Deputy Elk, Fourth-grader Erik Peskin said, "I wouldn't mind having one."

Educators address classroom needs

By Marianne Aiken

About 500,000 new students will enter California schools by the end of the decade and 150,000 new teachers will be needed by the turn of the century to meet them in the classroom.

Claremont Graduate School President John David Maguire gave those numbers to a group of educators Feb. 25 in a "town meeting" on revamping the teaching profession.

Educators from as far away as San Diego attended the meeting at The Claremont Graduate School to discuss a report by the California Commission on the Teaching Profession called "Who Will Teach Our Children?"

The meeting was one of 25 town meetings being held around the state to get suggestions from teachers on how to attract the best and the brightest.

The commission's report, released in November, is aimed at the kindergarten-through-12th-grade school system, and outlines 27 recommendations on such topics as reducing classroom size, increasing teaching standards and accountability, and keeping teachers in the teaching profession.

Twelve of the 27 recommendations have been addressed in bi-partisan legislation introduced recently in SB1604 and SB1605.

Assemblyman Charles Bader, R-Pomona, moderated a panel discussion between Maguire and five other educators, plus a representative from private industry.

One panelist expressed doubt that the recommendations would ever be implemented because of their high price tag.

"One of the premises of the report is that Californians are willing to pay for better education," said Timothy Graves, superintendent of the Pomona Unified School District. "I think that is naive and untrue."

A woman in the audience questioned whether the commission really polled a cross-section of the population during its 15-month investigation before coming out with the recommendations.

"I feel there should have been a broader base of people listened to," the woman said.

Wesley B. Truitt, corporate director for policy analysis at the Northrop Corp. of Los Angeles, said California's economy stands to suffer unless students enter the business world with better skills.

Forty-nine percent of the new college recruits Northrop hired last year were from out of state, Truitt said.

"That was a high year for California," he added. "Industry does not have to stay in our state."

Truitt also warned of a threat on the international front if education is not revitalized. He said there are only 100,000 high school students in the U.S. studying calculus, compared to 5 million in the Soviet Union.

Maguire urged educators, parents, and others interested in who will teach the next generation to form coalitions and communicate with their legislators to get SB1604 and SB1605 passed.

"Organized groups can be very effective with legislators," Maguire said.

Old guard challenged in Upland race

By Kimberly Heinrichs

As Upland's council race begins to take shape, it looks like it could be the old guard against the newcomers this April.

Frank Carpenter, Albert Canestro and Rosalie Kamansky have more than 40 years of combined experience in Upland politics, but this will be the first shot at public office by both Wanda Parker Kloeppel and Thomas McGilloway.

In addition to knowing each other, Carpenter, Canestro and Kamansky had many of the same people sign their nomination papers last month in order to run for office. Former Mayor John McCarthy and his wife, Eileen, as well as funeral home owner Zella Stone and real estate business owner Robert Sherwood, signed the papers for all three candidates.

Since there are three open seats, registered voters are allowed to sign nomination papers for a total of three candidates.

While many of Upland's prominent citizens are lining up behind the three longtime city politicians, Isabel Whitney, a member of the Chaffey Communities Cultural Center board of directors, has decided to help a newcomer.

Kloeppel said Whitney called her out of the blue and offered to help her campaign. She has even suggested that Kloeppel give away seedlings to residents who show up at city parks next month to talk to her about city problems — an idea Kloeppel said she is carrying out.

Whitney served as treasurer for the campaigns of former Upland Mayor George Gibson.

She is also a member of the city street and tree committee.

"I wanted to get involved with new people," Whitney said. "New blood always helps."

Whitney said that she is frustrated that none of the present council is willing to support the cultural center either financially or ceremonially. She is concerned about the city's historical monuments and

Ruling will have little effect on Upland's only adult business

By Kimberly Heinrichs

Ridding the city of its only adult business has been on the minds of Upland residents lately, including the five City Council candidates.

Although a recent Supreme Court decision will help the city write its law restricting new adult businesses in town, it will have little effect on the present T&A Video Store.

Since the store was established without the law, it probably will have to be "grandfathered in" and permitted to stay, according to City Attorney Don Maroney.

The store, located at 2121 W. Foothill Blvd., was the first adult business within Upland's city limits.

It inspired the council to pass an emergency law banning all new adult businesses until a permanent law is enacted.

A new law is expected to keep X-rated stores and theaters 1,000 feet from schools, churches and other specified institutions, city officials said.

The video store also spurred the formation of a group made up of local citizens and business owners called Communities Against Pornography.

Some council candidates agree with the group's goal of closing the store.

"I would like to see us really take that issue and let's force it to court," said Albert Canestro, a former councilman who is running for one of the three open seats. "I think we ought to drag them to court until they run out of money .... Put the world on notice that this is not in line with our gracious living."

While equally disturbed at the influx of adult business in town, other candidates are more cautious.

"Being a good mother and being a good member of the community you know how I'm against that thing," said Rosalie Kamansky, who currently is serving on the Planning Commission. But she is leery when it comes to lawsuits and courtrooms. "We're self-insured, the city of Upland, so we have to be very careful."

Frank Carpenter, who as a current member of the council has been dealing with the issue, believes the city has done all it can.

"Anyone that's been keeping up with it knows that the council has been doing everything it possibly can," he said. "I as an individual am extremely upset, but as a council person I can't do anything about it."

The district attorney is prosecuting the video store's owner Waldon Randall Welty — at the city's request — for disobeying the city's sign ordinance.

There is something more that some cities have done, but at great expense. Both the cities of Corona and Santa Ana have hired attorney James Clancy to prosecute adult businesses on the grounds of nuisance.

In December, Corona's nuisance suit became moot when the book store left town. But first the owner received $97,000 in attorney fees from the city because of a related suit. With the money spent on its own attorneys fees included, Maroney estimated Corona spent about $140,000 on the case.

Clancy currently is representing Santa Ana in a suit charging a theater with nuisance. The city has reportedly spent $400,000 in the ongoing 10-year battle.

"The city could bring the suit for nuisance. They could bring any suit that wanted to," Maroney said. "If they've got $140,000 to spend that might be

Ambulance regulation plan attacked

By Patrick McGreevy

A controversial plan to regulate ambulance companies countywide came under attack by West Valley cities last week during the first public hearing on the plan.

West Valley cities fear the plan will take away local control of the services and hinder competition between qualified ambulance companies. Rancho Cucamonga officials told a county medical committee last Friday.

The San Bernardino County Emergency Medical Care Committee held its first public hearing on the controversial plan and then continued the matter until its meeting next month for further consideration.

Committee members indicated that they share some of the concerns expressed Friday, and there will likely be some revision of the plan.

Representatives of Canyon Medical Services, Inc., and the Foothill Fire Protection District in Rancho Cucamonga also criticized aspects of the plan, which would require competitive bidding for exclusive operating areas in Upland and Rancho Cucamonga.

Speaking in favor of the plan was John Nolan, an attorney for the San Bernardino County Ambulance Association, who said the plan was a reasonable approach to regulating a vital service. He called the plan "correct and legally significant."

Mark Lorimer, an administrative analyst for the city of Rancho Cucamonga, read a letter from Mayor Jon Mikels to the committee in which the mayor spoke on behalf of the West Valley cities.

"It is a consensus among West End cities that the county is essentially forcing the cities to participate in a plan which does not have support from those agencies," the statement said. "You will recall that the plan was drafted within a two-week period with no public input until now and with no regard to how the cities would be impacted," it continued.

Rancho Cucamonga City Manager Lauren Wasserman, who represents city managers on the advisory committee, addressed the cities' specific concerns.

"The primary concern of the cities is having some control over response times, particularly," Wasserman said. "I think, philosophically, local officials resent somewhat having control taken away from them."

Late last year, the Rancho Cucamonga City Council drafted its own ordinance setting standards and regulations for ambulance systems operating in the city.

One of the concerns expressed Friday is the county plan's requirement for ambulance companies to have been operating for three years in a service area to qualify to participate in the competitive bidding in the area.

Under that qualification, Canyon would not be able to compete with Transmedical Inc. and Cole-Schaefer Ambulance Inc. because Canyon has only operated in Upland for a year and in Rancho Cucamonga for a few months.

Wasserman told the rest of the committee that under the plan, a company could meet the high standards set by the city and not qualify to participate in the competitive bidding.

That was one of the major complaints of Michael Leight, an attorney representing Canyon.

"This entire plan does nothing but artificially inflate the cost of emergency ambulance services to the county," Leight told the committee. "It (the plan) is something that actively discourages competition in San Bernardino County."

Leight questioned the legality of the plan's definition of "qualified," including the requirement for more than three years experience.

He said there is no rational basis for such a qualification.

But Nolan argued that without the requirement of three years of experience, companies could operate for three months and then fold, leaving an area without service.

A representative of the Foothill Fire Protection District in Rancho Cucamonga, Division Chief Robert Corcoran, said his district is also concerned about the loss of local control of ambulance services.

But Corcoran said a more overriding concern is the plan's drawing of boundaries so that Rancho Cucamonga is divided between two service areas at Rochester Avenue.

Corcoran said having two service areas, with two separate dispatching centers, could cause confusion and problems. He urged the committee to change the boundary so all of Rancho Cucamonga is in one service area.

Committee member Homer Aerts, a co-owner of Transmedical Inc, said the boundary change is at least one revision he thinks will be made when the plan is discussed by the committee at the next meeting.

He said, "I'm absolutely positive" that the plan will be revised.

Mikels quits job as mayor, keeps seat on council

By Marianne Aiken

Rancho Cucamonga Mayor Jon Mikels announced Tuesday he would resign as mayor after Wednesday night's City Council meeting.

Mikels, who is challenging incumbent Cal McElwain for the second district county supervisor's seat, said he will be stepping down as mayor, but will remain on the council.

"It is with bittersweet emotions that, by this letter, I submit my resignation as your appointed mayor," Mikels stated in his resignation letter. "I will not be a candidate for either mayor or City Council next November, as you already know.

"I will assume full candidate status for election to the board of supervisors from the second district on March 7, 1986. In addition, I will be installed as the president of the Southern California Association of Governments (SCAG) in April."

Mikels is the fourth West Valley mayor to resign in the last eight months.

Ontario Mayor Robert Ellingwood left office Nov. 17; Montclair's Mayor Harold Hayes won a seat on the Monte Vista Water District's board of directors in November and will leave his city post in April; and Larry

EDUCATION

Play planned

The Montclair High School student body will present the modern comedy "The Worst High School Play in the World" on tonight, Friday and Saturday. Performances start at 8 p.m. and tickets are $3 at the door.

Directing the production, which will be staged in the campus auditorium, are Tim Tackett and Mike Kremer.

The cast includes Mike Armendarez, Becky Auclair, Lisa Berry, Brandon Ladd Burkey, Jeff Caulk, Jennifer Cooper, Trisch Dehearing, Gina Garman, Mark Harris, David Hillenbrand, Trevor Jenkins, Laura Kelly, Bill Knowles, Kara Lakkees, Regina Marchio, Alan Meier, Jon Park and Julie Sheridan.

Grant recieved

Montclair High School has received a $5,000 grant from Doctors' Hospital under the Adopt a School Program.

The Adopt a School Program was designed to encourage industry to get involved with a community school. In the fall of 1985 Doctor's Hospital, through the Chamber of Commerce, hosted a reception recognizing the Montclair staff. A grant of $5,000 was presented in the spring of 1985.

Under the Adopt a School Program speakers from Doctor's Hospital are invited to Montclair High School and tours for students are given at the hospital.

Corporal punishment rarely used in school

By Marianne Aiken

Corporal punishment is alive, but rarely used, in West Valley schools.

Administrators at four West Valley elementary school districts say that they use corporal punishment as a "last resort" discipline tactic.

However, the use of corporal punishment in the West Valley appears not to be as severe or as widespread as the kind used in Stanislaus County, where a school psychologist is pushing a state law banning corporal punishment.

Marilyn Burns, who said she went home sick and crying one day after hearing of eight schoolchildren who were spanked that day for infractions as minor as refusing to eat lunch, is behind the proposed state law.

Burns declined to identify the school or school district she works for, but last Thursday persuaded the Children's Services Committee, a group under the wing of Stanislaus County's Mental Health Advisory Board, to suggest the advisory board sponsor and support legislation banning corporal punishment in all California schools.

If spanking a child at school becomes illegal, it probably would not be missed by school principals, judging by an informal survey on the use of corporal punishment locally.

Most local school districts permit disciplinary spanking under certain guidelines, with the verbal or written permission of the parents, and always administered by a third party — angry teachers are not allowed to spank schoolchildren.

Records are also kept of all corporal punishment incidents.

Joe Laponis, principal of Alta Loma Elementary School, likened corporal punishment to the death penalty, and questioned whether it is a deterrent to misbehavior.

"By physical pain, do you get your message across?" he asked.

Laponis said the school uses a system of behavior modification to reward children for good behavior, and hands out "tickets" as punishment for bad behavior. Detention and parent conferences happen before a spanking is considered.

Laponis found the idea of a state law banning spanking to be controversial.

"I'd rather not be quoted on the state law," he said. "There are two sides to that. It's like, 'when did you stop beating your wife?'"

John Costello, superintendent of the Cucamonga School District, said the problem with corporal punishment is that it's not timely. It's administered some time after the actual infraction occurred.

"Most consequences should be immediate so the youngster's able to draw the connection between the inappropriate behavior and the punishment," Costello said. "From strictly a learning point of view, it's counterproductive."

Corporal punishment is used once or twice a year in the Etiwanda School District, said Superintendent Carleton Lightfoot.

"It would have to be some cruel and unusual action by the child, or, perhaps, continuing theft of other people's personal property," Lightfoot said. "It certainly would not be administered for not eating your lunch."

Lightfoot said generally speaking, corporal punishment is more effective with the younger children than the older ones.

In the Upland School District, there has only been one notice of corporal punishment this academic year, said Lauren Sanchez, associate superintendent.

"Corporal punishment as a form of disciplinary action I think is not the best way to go," Sanchez said. "We look for all different kinds of options before we spank children."

Would he favor a state law banning corporal punishment? "If I could wave a magic wand, I think I would," Sanchez said.

$38 million flood-control project OK'd

By Patrick McGreevy

San Bernardino County will soon begin a large flood-control project aimed at giving channels through Rancho Cucamonga, Fontana and Ontario more capacity for passing stormwater out of the cities without affecting nearby property.

The San Bernardino County Board of Supervisors Feb. 24 approved the $38 million Day Creek Water Project through Rancho Cucamonga and drainage plans for Day, Etiwanda and San Sevaine creeks in the West Valley.

The approval was given despite the existence of unavoidable, non-mitigable environmental impacts including the effects on air pollution, vegetation, public services and energy consumption from urbanization of the areas around the projects.

The main direct effect is stated by the study as the "removal of natural vegetation to create manmade landforms (dams) which will be visible throughout a large portion of the Chino Basin; the concrete lined channels in the upper portions of the subject watersheds will also be visible over large areas."

But the Board of Supervisors approved the project by declaring that the need for flood control was an overriding circumstance requiring the project despite the environmental effects.

"Construction of the projects will provide regional flood protection for major portions of the cities of Rancho Cucamonga, Ontario, Fontana and unincorporated areas in the West Valley of San Bernardino County," the report said.

The Day Creek Project involves the construction of a dam in the mouth of Day Canyon north of the city of Rancho Cucamonga and concrete channels along the creek through Rancho Cucamonga and Ontario into Riverside County, according to project manager Ruben Montez.

The project also includes construction of concrete channels along the lower Etiwanda Creek below the San Bernardino Freeway to the Wineville Basin.

A total of 10 miles of concrete channels are proposed for the project which is scheduled to get under way in May or June, Montez said. He said $13.5 million of the project will be coming in the form of a federal loan.

The drainage plan for the three creeks eventually would extend the Day Creek Project to include San Sevaine Creek near the north border intersections of Rancho Cucamonga and Fontana, and Upper Etiwanda Creek in Rancho Cucamonga.

The unanimous approval by the Board of Supervisors Feb. 24 also included adoption of a master plan for San Sevaine Creek that ties flood control projects into those done by Riverside County officials on their section of the creek.

College taking blood donations

Blood donations will be taken at the Chaffey College cafeteria Tuesday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Each donor will receive a free blood drop label pin from the Blood Bank of San Bernardino and Riverside Counties. Blood can't be available unless concerned citizens give before it is needed.

Anyone in good health from 17 to 71 years of age can donate blood. Those over 65 are required to have yearly written consent from their physician. Besides the satisfaction of sharing the "Gift of Life," each donor receives a mini-physical in which blood pressure, temperature, pulse and hemoglobin are checked.

Only sterile, sealed, disposable materials are used, and then discarded. It is impossible to contract AIDS by donating blood.

Chaffey College is located at 5885 Haven Ave., Alta Loma. For more information, call Patricia Mathewson, of health services at 987-1737.

Ruling will affect area adult businesses

By Kimberly Heinrichs

A U.S. Supreme Court ruling last week will make it easier for the West Valley to restrict the locations of adult entertainment businesses.

The court approved the right of Renton, Wash. to limit adult theaters to an isolated area by banning them within 1,000 feet of homes, churches, parks and schools.

Ordinances similar to Renton's are being prepared in Upland, Rancho Cucamonga, Montclair and the county.

"We are delighted with the decision of the U.S. Supreme Court. It will give us a basis on which to write our ordinance," Montclair City Administrator Mike Milhiser said.

The city has been putting off drafting its ordinance restricting adult businesses for several months, while it waited for the court to make its decision, he said.

Like Renton, the cities of Montclair, Upland and Rancho Cucamonga are considering requiring that the X-rated stores or theaters be a certain distance from institutions like churches and schools.

But before the new ruling they were required to prepare studies that proved these businesses would be harmful if located close to these places.

"We were going to have a real estate appraisal study," said Rancho Cucamonga City Attorney James Markman.

Markman explained that the study would have had to prove that some locations for the X-rated stores or theaters would hurt surrounding institutions and businesses.

It also would have had to find profitable locations for adult businesses, he said.

Meanwhile, Upland City Attorney Don Maroney had planned to use testimony from a psychologist to prove adult businesses can be harmful when placed near schools.

The Supreme Court's ruling will allow smaller cities to rely on the experience of bigger cities and their studies.

"I think the psychology of the kiddies will be the same in a small town as in a big city," Maroney said, adding that the study will now cost the city less. "The experience of some of the larger cities would be far more cogent than the speculation of a psychologist at (our) hearing. It seems like a better way to go."

Last week's ruling states that cities may use zoning powers to limit adult businesses to one isolated area — popularly known as "red-light districts" — or by requiring that the theaters be scattered.

The court made a similar decision involving Detroit in 1976, but Tuesday's decision allows restrictions on adult businesses before their effects on communities are known.

In a December interview Ontario's Deputy City Attorney Robert Dougherty said that his city lost a case to Le Sex Shoppe on Holt Boulevard in 1984.

The Superior Court struck down the city's ordinance restricting the store because it failed to provide studies justifying its argument that the present location would be harmful to the community, he said.

Dougherty was unavailable for comment on how this new ruling would affect Ontario's battle with the store.

The county, which is preparing its own ordinance, already has been sued over a temporary ordinance restricting adult businesses using the 1,000-foot rule.

County Counsel Alan Marks declined to comment on how the ruling would affect a suit filed against the county by Tollis Inc., which owns the Eyefull adult

Retired people's group meeting set

American Association of Retired Persons, Ontario-Upland Chapter No. 781, 590 N. Second Ave., Upland, will meet Monday, March 17, at 11:30 a.m. for Potluck and 12:30 p.m. for a program by the Kindergarten classes of the Upland Elementary School.

Parents and grandparents are invited. Call Elva at 986-5986 for further information.

PACT plans program

The PACT (Preventing Abuse of Children Together) Education Program from Chino will be presenting a parent night for Sycamore School in Upland.

The program, focused on how to prevent abuse through education, is scheduled for tonight from 7:30-9 p.m.

Parents can preview the curriculum/films that will be presented in the classroom.

complex on the northwest corner of Central Avenue and Mission Boulevard.

Markman, Rancho Cucamonga's city attorney, said that the ruling is a good sign for California cities which often have won cases at the state level, but lost them in federal courts. The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals struck down Renton's ordinance in 1984, ruling that it violated free-speech rights.

While he said adult theaters and stores have been the most protected form of speech in the nation, Markman said this ruling might signal a change.

"It appears that the Supreme Court has backed off from its hard line," he said.

Parental child abductions prove costly to county

By Matt Coker

Linda will never forget the surprise birthday party co-workers threw for her earlier this month.

But instead of relishing the celebration, the Ontario resident will look back with disgust. It was the evening of the party that she discovered her child had been abducted.

Fortunately, the county's Child Abduction Unit tracked 7-year-old "Brian" down, discovering he had been enrolled in a Roanoke, Va., elementary school. Brian is not the child's real name. Linda did not want her last name nor her son's real first name revealed.

Linda's relief in discovering Brian was safe with her ex-husband, who now faces child abduction and interstate kidnapping charges, was short-lived.

A cashier barely able to put aside enough of her salary for a small savings, Linda had to borrow $900 to fly to Virginia and retrieve her son.

Thus, as parental child abduction escalates, some West Valley residents are facing a double trauma.

"Parents get victimized twice," said Charles Seek, field investigator with the county's Child Abduction Unit, who was juggling six other cases similar to Linda's. "First, their kid gets taken from them. Then they have to pay to get them back."

In some counties, such as Riverside, investigators make the trip to get the missing children and have the state reimburse the costs.

Rod Perkins, supervising investigator with Riverside County's child abduction division, cited Civil Code Section 4604, which states that counties can set up a fund to cover missing children investigation

Out-of-court settlement has been reached in youngster's lawsuit

By Lori Moody

An out-of-court settlement has been reached in a 1984 lawsuit filed by the parents of a 6-year-old girl who alleged that a fall from a swing set at a Rancho Cucamonga preschool prevented her from pursuing a modeling career.

Susan O'Neil, who was 3 years old at the time of the alleged incident, will receive monthly payments which over the course of her lifetime are expected to reach about $500,000, attorney Charles Rossman of Pomona said last week.

The lawsuit was filed Oct. 30, 1984, in West Valley Superior Court against Pebbles Christian Pre-School on the girl's behalf by her parents, Susan and James O'Neil.

Rossman said the settlement, reached Feb. 14, was handled through an insurance company representing the school. Rossman declined to say the amount of each monthly payment.

The school is affiliated with the Rancho Cucamonga United Methodist Church. Leslie Calero, director of the preschool, referred comments on the lawsuit to church administrator, Glen Larson. Larson could not be reached for comment.

O'Neil suffered scarring after she was cut on her lip and chin in a fall from a swing in October 1983 at the pre-school, Rossman said.

The lawsuit said that the school "negligently" maintained and operated the playground facilities. "In essence she was unsupervised," Rossman alleged.

As a result of her injuries, O'Neil has been prevented from pursuing a modeling career, and lost future earnings, according to the lawsuit. Rossman said the girl is not being treated currently but may undergo plastic surgery when she reaches physical maturity.

A spokeswoman for the attorney's office of Donald E. White told The Daily Report earlier that the girl had begun to pursue a modeling career when she fell off the swing.

treasures, she said.

"Nobody down there in City Hall supports it," she said. "I've talked to (Kloepfel) and she thinks it's a good idea."

Former Mayor McCarthy said he signed Carpenter, Canestro and Kamansky's papers and is endorsing them because he thinks they are the most qualified. In addition, he worked with all three while they were on the Planning Commission. He was the person who nominated Kamansky for the position.

This familiarity among the city's politicians accounts for some unusual moves, like the fact that Canestro signed Carpenter's papers even though he's technically an opponent.

"He's the incumbent and he's probably going to be re-elected," Canestro said. The two have known each other for years, meeting when Carpenter moved down the street from Canestro. Carpenter even gave Canestro's name to the then-mayor as a commission candidate 17 years ago, Canestro said. They served on the council together during Canestro's term from 1980 to 1984.

"I was pleasantly surprised," Carpenter said of his friend's signature. But he added that they are not running together and that he is endorsing no one.

"It's extremely difficult, in my opinion, if you take sides and the opposition wins," he said, explaining that the council must work as a team without hard feelings left over from elections.

However, that doesn't apply to his campaign manager Robert Sherwood, who signed papers for Kamansky and Canestro. Upland Mayor Richard Anderson apparently feels differently than Carpenter also, having signed Kamansky's papers.

Kamansky, who was the last candidate to turn in her papers, said the similar signatures on the papers are by accident, not by design.

"I went to the ones I knew," she said. "I'm an old-timer here. You work in the whole community together on so many things."

Canestro said he carefully selected the people he wanted to sign his papers, because he wanted the 20 signatures to count for something.

"I try to get people I know. I try to get people who wield a little influence," he said. "These are all good people who speak for the community."

McGilloway, who has only lived in Upland since August, said he went door-to-door in three neighborhoods, including his own, for his signatures.

"I really don't know that many influential people. I think I really got more information from talking to average citizens," McGilloway said.

"I obviously have to concede to them that they have the political connections and know who's who," he said.

the way to do it."

Maroney added that he would advise the council against it.

Candidate Wanda Parker Kloepfel said she would like to pursue getting rid of T&A Video, but in view of the expense would like to contact the National Federation of Decency to see if the organization has funds or lawyers willing to help. A NFD representative from the West Valley has appeared at past council meetings.

Kamansky and fellow candidate Thomas McGilloway are in favor of restricting the business through more stringent laws.

The commissioner said she would consider restricting the store's hours, which start at 8 a.m. and end at midnight.

McGilloway supports writing an ordinance that would take the doors off the store's video viewing booths, leaving the customers out in the open.

Such a law already is in effect in Ontario and will be included in Upland's law, Maroney said. Because taking off the doors would not be as inconvenient as making the store move, Maroney said T&A Video would not be "grandfathered" in on this law.

"It would go out of business on its own. If they (the booths) were three-sided, they wouldn't be used," McGilloway said, explaining that without the on-site booths the store would become just another video rental store and would have a hard time competing with the mainstream rental stores.

"If you take away that uniqueness, than he's in the pack with everybody else."

Subcommittees will investigate R.C. commission

By Marianne Aiken

The continuing identity crisis of the Rancho Cucamonga Community Advisory Commission (CAC) will be investigated by a set of subcommittees, following a joint meeting last Thursday between the CAC and the City Council.

CAC chairman Paul Saldana, along with commission members Jim Banks and Bruce Ann Hahn, will get together with a yet-to-be-formed council subcommittee, and outline what the CAC's role should be.

CAC members said they proposed the revisions last Thursday to the 1979 ordinance that created the commission because they were unclear about their purpose.

There also were some fears that commission members could be removed from the CAC for speaking out publicly as private citizens on local issues.

Former CAC member Phil Yenovkian was ousted by the City Council last May for complaining about the city's issuance of a tree removal permit to Crismar Development Co., after the firm already had removed 75 to 100 trees from his Alta Loma neighborhood without a permit.

"If someone is removed from the commission in an ex post facto way, and is judged in a way that is not written down, it seems unfair," commissioner Neil Westlortorn said.

Another CAC member said the code of conduct, which was the result of six months' work, was not solely an offshoot of the Yenovkian incident.

"I don't recall anyone ever mentioning his name more than once or twice," said commissioner Jeff Hill. "The main thing was that when a new person comes on the CAC, they'd have some guidelines."

Mayor Jon Mikels said he thought the code of conduct was unnecessary.

"I think everybody on this body knows what propriety is," Mikels said. "I think that person (Yenovkian) tried to make a show and a farce out of the City Council meeting. It was not that Yenovkian was removed for anything he said, it was for how he said it."

The revisions proposed Thursday called for the council to give CAC members 10 days written notice before removing them from the panel, and also protected CAC members from being removed for speaking out publicly as private citizens on local issues.

Especially controversial was one section that encouraged CAC members "free expression of ideas, particularly unpopular ideas or ideas contrary to city policy, without running afoul of the true decision makers..."

Another controversial section stated that nothing in the section "shall be construed to limit the actions or expressions of Advisory Commission members who are acting in the capacity of private citizens."

The 15-member commission consists of five members from each of the three communities that were joined when Rancho Cucamonga became a city in 1977.

It is designed to help maintain the identities of Etiwanda, Alta Loma and Cucamonga and increase communication between the City Council and residents.

Cities' plan to create service area is denied

By Patrick McGreevy

Gov. Deukmejian's office has denied an application by five West Valley cities to create a new service area to administer federal job training funds, officials said Monday.

The decision was criticized as political by Will Jones, the director of the city-affiliated Ontario Employment Training Agency, which drafted the application.

"I think it was pretty much expected that he (Deukmejian) would not overturn a group of his political appointees in an election year," Jones said this morning in reference to the Deukmejian administration's upholding of a state jobs council's decision.

He said the local cities will appeal the state's decision to the federal Department of Labor in the next 30 days.

The application asked that Ontario, Upland, Rancho Cucamonga, Chino and Montclair be allowed to form their own Private Industry Council to administer job training funds.

Currently residents of the five cities receive job training services under a program administered by the San Bernardino County Board of Supervisors and a Private Industry Council appointed by the board.

Local cities requested the creation of the new service delivery area to gain more local control of job training funds, according to Jones.

Earlier this month, the state

Job Training Coordinating Council voted to recommend against creation of a new service area arguing that the five cities did not represent a significantly large enough portion of the county's job market.

The council also argued that giving the five cities authority to administer a separate job training program would not significantly improve the service to the labor market.

Jones said the governor's office agreed with the council's arguments despite West Valley officials contention that the five cities, with a population of approximately 300,000, represent approximately 36 percent of the county's labor market.

Jones said it is not clear what the five cities' share of the county's job training funds would be.

The county presently receives approximately $5.7 million annually from the federal government and West Valley residents account for up to 35 percent of the participants in job training programs, according to Larry Vancura, the county's program manager for training.

Claiming that the governor's decision was a "further detail," of the process, Jones said he still expects to have a local service area created.

To expedite creation of the West Valley program so it can be operating by July 1, local cities have created a local Private Industry Council chaired by Rancho Cucamonga James Bookout. Last Thursday the council began drafting a two-year plan for the job training funds.

Ident-A-Child program set Saturday

An Ident-A-Child program, sponsored by the Rancho Cucamonga Chamber of Commerce and the San Bernardino County Sheriff's Department, will be held in the parking lot of McDonald's Restaurant, 9869 Foothill Blvd., Rancho Cucamonga on Saturday.

"We have 20,000 children in this community," said chairman of the program, Pat McCoy, "and none of them have ever been reported missing. We feel that the Ident-A-Child program plays a major role.

"The Ident-A-Child program allows parents to have a complete set of their child's fingerprints," added McCoy, "and parents of preschoolers receive a set of palm prints. In the event of a missing child, prints are of great importance."

The prints are given to the parents and no copies of the prints are retained by either the police or the chamber.

The first Ident-A-Child program was initiated by the Sheriff's Department with the Rancho Cucamonga Chamber of Commerce last March.

"We're really proud to be able to work with the sheriff's department on something that is this important to the community," said McCoy. "There is no charge and no age limit, but children must be accompanied by a parent."

A very local TV studio

Hidden on the Chaffey College campus is a little bit of show business.

Few people know it, said executive producer Sandra Garner, but two television shows — "Inside Focus," and "A Closer Look" — are produced on campus each week.

A crew of about twelve, most of them volunteer telecommunications students from colleges other than Chaffey, and most of them women, camp out at a studio in the vocational education building on the Alta Loma campus Fridays for as long as it takes to film the two shows — sometimes until 2 a.m.

Garner, a former Chaffey College governing board member, described "Inside Focus" as an audience participation show, and "A Closer Look," as an entertainment talk show focusing on the Inland Empire.

Filming starts at 3 p.m. Fridays and the crew films two episodes of one show each week.

The shows appear at noon Saturdays on Channel 46. The shows are broadcast on alternate weeks — one week "Inside Focus" is on, and the next week, "A Closer Look" is on in the same time slot.

The shows are unique in a couple of ways, said Garner. "A Closer Look" is the only area television show hosted by two women — Garner and partner Shelley Vos Henson — and for that reason has drawn the attention of the Los Angeles entertainment community.

"We have gotten comments from the industry in Los Angeles on having two women hosts," Garner said. "You just don't see very much of that."

Also, the set of "Inside Focus" and "A Closer Look" is one of the few places in the Los Angeles area where telecommunications students can get actual hands-on experience. Most local television studios are union-controlled, Garner said, and student interns can look, but not touch.

Because of that, the programs attract students from many other Southland colleges and universities.

"A lot of university students are coming over here to enroll," Garner said.

"There are not too many college students that can leave with a degree and have that kind of experience. Here they get a hands-on opportunity."

Only one student working in the studio last Friday was a Chaffey College student. The others were all from different schools in the area.

The college has budgeted $236 a year for production, Garner said, so students put a lot of their own money into supplies.

Garner is the only paid employee, making $1 a year for 30-50-hour work weeks. She spends her mornings teaching at Don Lugo High School in the Chino Unified School District.

"That doesn't count (director) Tracy (Betancourt) or (producer and co-host) Shelley's (Henson's) time," Garner said.

Henson is instrumental in getting guests for the shows, Garner said.

"The only time we have a problem is when the agent gets involved," she added. "Of course, the first question is money — and we don't have any."

They have to be careful in how they present the shows to potential guests, Garner said. On one hand, some guests are eager to help out in a college setting. Others are hesitant to get involved in something off the beaten track.

"You have to be very careful in how you make your contact," Garner said.

Recent guests have included country and western singer Hoyt Axton and magician Harry Blackstone, Jr., son of The Great Blackstone, Henson said.

Henson and Garner's goals are to get additional sponsorship for the shows, and get them on other channels.

"One of the shows will have to go by the wayside," Garner said.

Of the two, "Inside Focus," hosted by Garner, will probably be the one to go, because of the logistics of filming with a studio audience of 80.

"When you do a show like 'Inside Focus,' it gets very sterile," Garner said. "The logistics get pretty crazy."

Garner and Henson will probably take on "Inside Focus" as a project for their own production company, called Garner Vos.

The two shows are drawing attention of other television stations, including KNBC-TV Channel 4 in Los Angeles, Garner said.

"We're getting a lot of attention," she said. "It makes the students feel good."

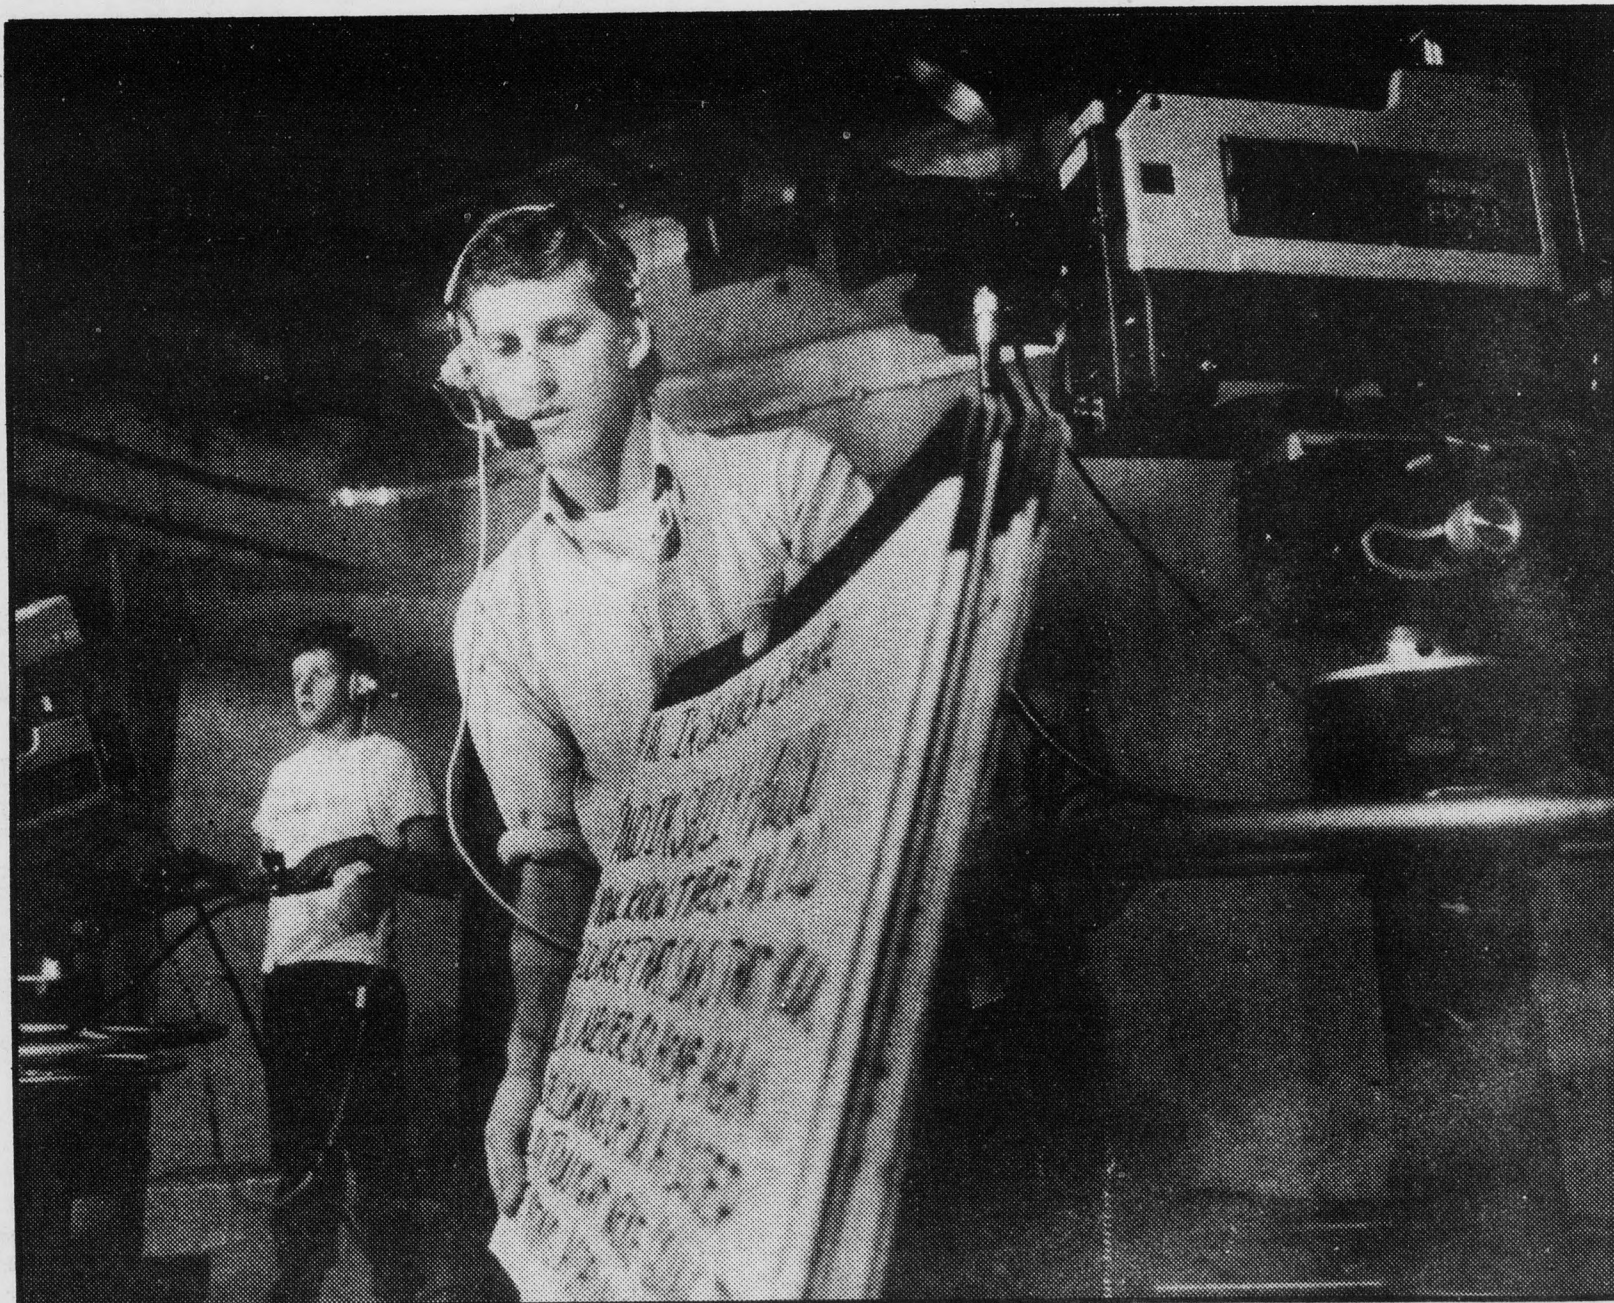

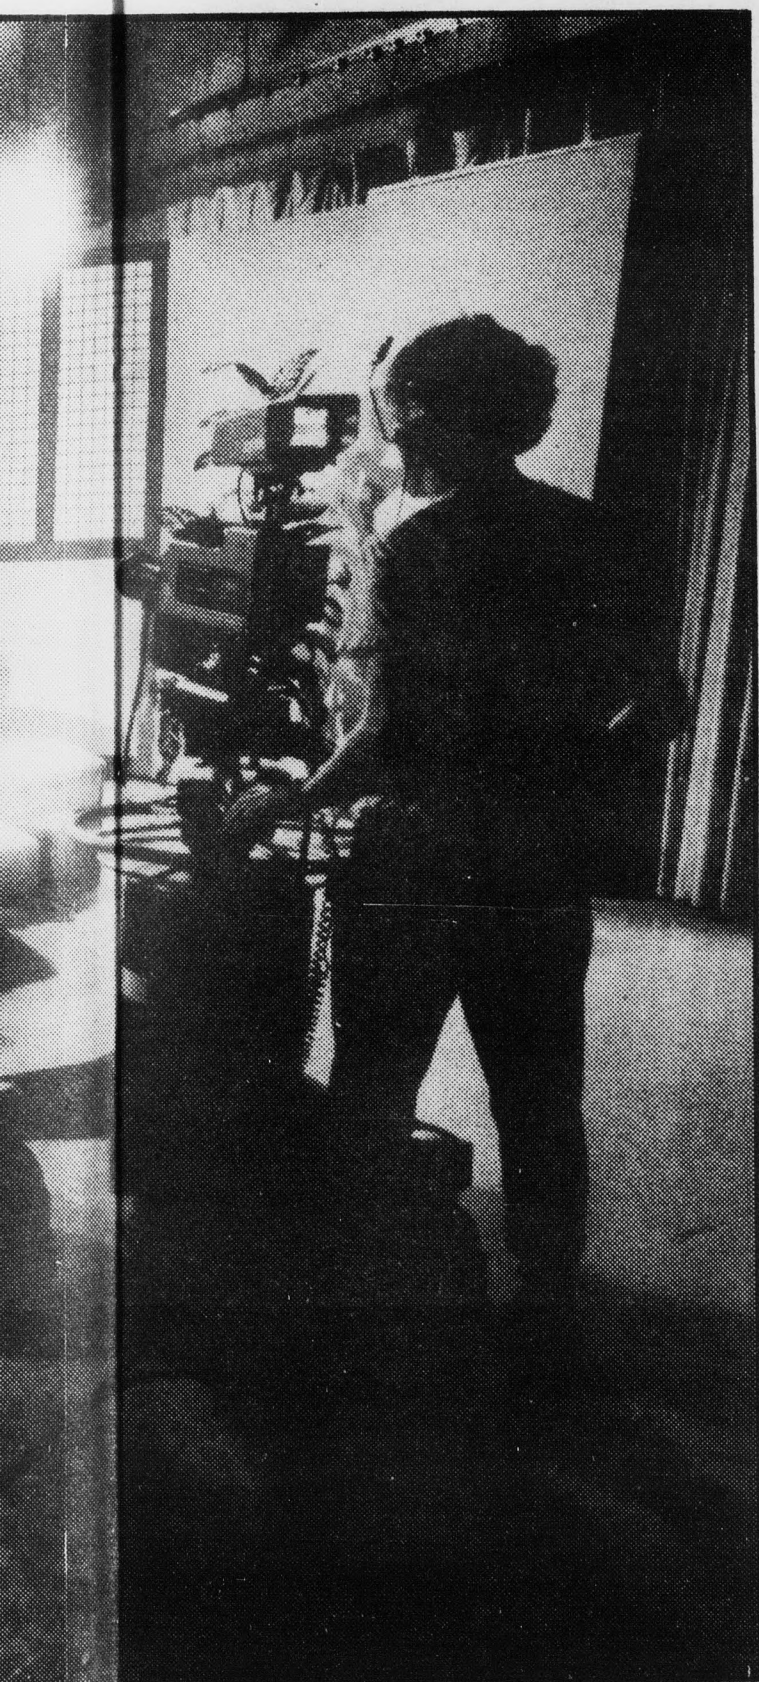

"It's just a matter of visibility." □

The call of all quiet on the set comes from the floor manager (left) as the crew prepares to tape the introduction of the show 'A closer look'. Co-host Sandra Garner (above left) stands in as make-up person as she touches up co-host Shelley Henson's face. Henson and Garner (above right) break up laughing after blowing their lines for the third straight time. They got it right on the next take. Camera operator Gary Smith (above), a former Chaffey College student, adjusts the cue cards to allow Henson and Garner to appear to be looking into the camera while actually reading the cards.

expenses. Those costs then can be reimbursed by the state or the person convicted of child stealing, who is a parent in 90 percent of the cases.

Perkins said it is his understanding that the law orders district attorney offices to find and retrieve abducted children, although different counties apply the mandate differently.

"San Bernardino (county) doesn't go out of the state (to get missing children). We go anywhere in the world," said Perkins, who currently has two investigators in Germany bringing home missing children.

"Riverside may be in for an unpleasant surprise when the auditor comes to their office," said Terrence Brown, division chief with the San Bernardino County Child Support Division.

San Bernardino's division, which created the state's first child abduction unit, recently found itself with another first: The first audit by the state into claims for child stealing investigation costs.

"Riverside County will probably be in for a bigger surprise than we were for claim cutting. That's why we're a little bit cautious," he said. "... A lot of children taken out of state are certainly capable of flying back on their own."

Nowhere in Section 4604 does it say the state will reimburse counties for sending investigators or parents out of the state or country to retrieve their missing children, Brown said.

But it always has been a policy in San Bernardino to make sure the child is returned, and if parents cannot afford to make travel arrangements, taxpayers' money must be used, Brown said.

All of the county's requests for reimbursement from the state dating back to 1978 had not been honored until they arrived in a lump sum in June 1985. Through three weeks of investigation, the auditors are finding all or a good chunk of those claims will have to be returned to the state, Brown said.

Since the county was uncertain what would be reimbursed before June 1985, travel funds were tight when it came to child stealing investigations. Now, with the state auditors' revelations and the Gramm-Rudman-Hollins federal balanced budget act, the county is again tightening the purse strings, Brown said.

While he did not know the specifics of Linda's situation, he did say parents are being told there is nothing in the county's travel budget.

But, even though travel costs related to missing children investigations were axed in the last budget, the county Board of Supervisors will be asked in the next fiscal plan to allocate $35,000, according to Brown, who expects approval of the request. He also believes the state will reimburse the county this time.

"To me, the bottom line seems to be whether or not the child will be returned. Yes, he will, whether the taxpayers or parents or we pick up the tab. That seems to be the important issue in my mind," Brown said.

But he warned that, considering the growing number of reported parental child abductions, the $35,000 will be spent in a month if the division treks across the country each time a child must be returned.

New state legislation may be the answer. Assemblyman Gray Davis, D-Beverly Hills, earlier this year introduced legislation which, if approved, would allow a parent to recover his losses from searching for his missing child. That bill is not yet scheduled to be heard in the Assembly, said Davis' spokeswoman, Melba Muscarolas.

So, for Linda, who has turned to private missing-children foundations for financial help, the legislation would come too late.

"I don't know," she said nervously exhaling cigarette smoke, "if I'll get that money back or not."

Senior lunch program gets help with vans

A Fontana-based organization that operates a program transporting senior citizens to hot lunch centers has been given a helping hand in its difficulties in securing automobile liability insurance.

The San Bernardino County Board of Supervisors last week agreed to take legal title to approximately 14 vans operated by the Steelworkers Oldtimers Foundation and cover the vans with the county's self-insured liability program.

The vans will continue to be operated by the foundation, which contracts with the county's Office on Aging to provide hot lunches and van transportation for seniors throughout the West Valley. The foundation had been unable to purchase automobile liability insurance for the vans at an affordable rate.

By legally transferring them to the county Feb. 24, the board agreed to have the vans covered by the county's self-insured liability program, according to James Fare, the administrator of the county's Human Resources Agency.

In approving the transfer, the Board of Supervisors also decreased the contract with the foundation by $6,179 to cover the additional costs assumed by the county in taking over legal ownership of the vans, Fare told the supervisors.

While the change might not save the foundation much in the final four months of the current fiscal year, it is expected to save thousands of dollars next year, possibly allowing the restoration of van service for Upland's seniors, according to John Piazza, the foundation's executive director.

Piazza said the Upland van has been out of service for approximately six months because of lack of funding for a driver. The savings on insurance may allow the foundation to afford a driver and the maintenance expenses for the Upland van, he said.

Second District County Supervisor Cal McElwain had asked three weeks ago for the board to delay action on the acceptance of title so that he could be sure the new arrangement would allow the Upland van to eventually be restored to service.

McElwain said Feb. 24 that he was satisfied with the proposal and the vote was unanimous.

Health centers offer immunization, exams

Child and adolescent health and immunization clinics are offered by the San Bernardino County Department of Public Health at various West Valley health centers.

Services include complete physical examinations and immunizations for all children and youths from birth to 21 years of age. These exams are free to children from Medi-Cal families when a current POE (Proof of Eligibility) label is presented. They also are free for children birth to 6 years and 10 to 18 years of age from low income families.

Special low-cost sports and camp physicals also are available. A fee is charged for all other children and youth from birth to 21 years.

The locations for physical exams are as follows:

- Ontario Health Center, 320 E. D St., Ontario.
- Bon View Community Center, 1010 Bon View, Ontario.
- Chino Health Center, 13260 Central Ave., Chino.
- Rancho Cucamonga Neighborhood Center, 9791 E. Arrow Highway, Rancho Cucamonga.

Immunizations are available on a walk-in basis to all children and teen-agers accompanied by a parent or guardian. There will be a $2 fee per visit for each child. Parents are advised to bring their children's immunization records to the clinic.

Immunization clinics are offered as follows:

- Ontario Health Center, every Monday 9-11:30 a.m.
- Chino Health Center, March 10 and 24 from 2-3:30 p.m.

- Rancho Cucamonga Neighborhood Center, March 17 from 2-4 p.m.

For more information on immunizations, call 988-1312.

Mikels/from Page 8

Walker, Chino's mayor, will leave his post in November.

Mikels said he was resigning because his campaign activities and the presidency of SCAG "will demand additional time commitments which could interfere with some of the ceremonial functions a mayor is obligated to fulfill."

Mikels also mentioned his chairmanship of the Route 30 (Foothill Freeway) group, an advisory group to Caltrans, as another time-consuming activity.

Mikels said he has been the first vice-president of SCAG for a year, and he expects to be installed as president by the general assembly of SCAG at its April 3 meeting.

"It's been a relatively safe assumption," Mikels said of the SCAG presidency, "but it is not conclusive until the nominating committee submits my name to the executive committee March 6."

City Manager Lauren Wasserman said the City Council would probably select a new mayor at Wednesday night's meeting.

Wasserman said Mikels has served longest as mayor of all the past mayors of Rancho Cucamonga.

In the 1984 election, it was decided by initiative that the mayor's position would be an elected position starting with the 1986 election.

Previously, the mayor was selected by the council, to serve at the pleasure of the council for a two-year term, Wasserman said.

Mikels has been on the City Council since the city formed in 1977. He was re-elected to the council in 1980, and again in 1982.

He was appointed by the council as mayor in 1982 and 1984.

Phil Schlosser preceded Mikels as mayor, serving from 1980 to 1982.

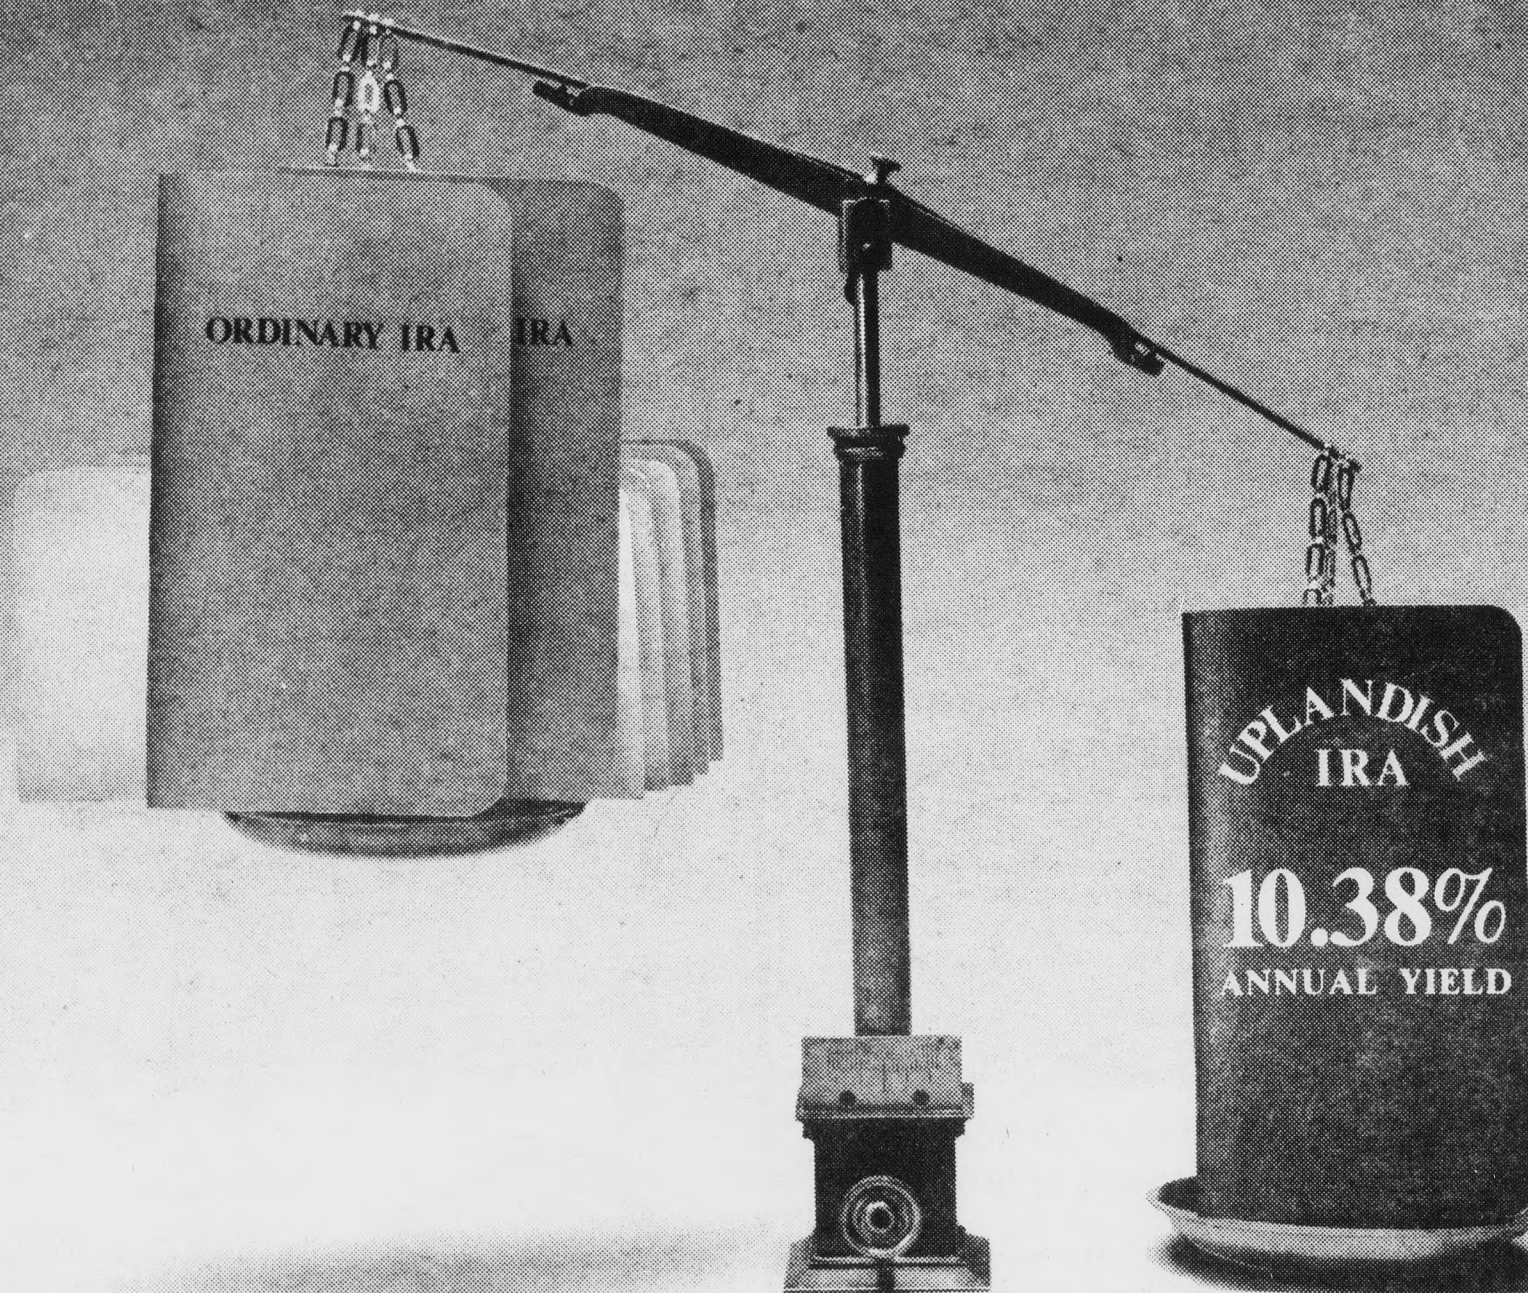

Jim Frost was the city's first first mayor, from 1977 to 1980.

"I have sincerely appreciated the confidence that the past two City Councils have demonstrated by selecting me mayor," Mikels went on to say in his resignation letter. "I look forward to working with you on issues of mutual importance through the balance of my term on the City Council."

Students enjoy ship trip to watch whales

By Cynthia Hunter

Sit right back and you'll hear a tale, a tale of a mighty trip, that started from Long Beach port aboard a mighty ship. The mates were mighty sailor men, the skipper brave and sure, 62 fifth graders set out last Friday for a three-hour tour, a three-hour tour

"The waves started getting rough, the not-so-tiny ship was tossed, if not for the advent of the migrating whales the Eldorado would have failed. — based on the theme song from "Gilligan's Island"

Though whale watching may not fully parallel the television comedy "Gilligan's Island," it does have its comical moments. "If you'd like to feed the sea gulls that's all right — they like potato chips — but please throw the wrappers away," announced skipper Guy Ashley of Queens Wharf Sportfishing, passing introductory remarks to a troupe of nearly 100 parents and students.

Now mid-season for the popular sightseeing adventure, boats rarely have vacancies as thousands of Southern Californians find themselves spellbound by these creatures who are thought to have once lived on land.

As the boat cruised out of the harbor, Ashley pointed out the more eminent sights, highlighted by four California sea lions basking on a buoy.

Less stationary than other monuments, these wet-whiskered mammals proved quite mobile despite their flabby physique. A glance at the several hundred peering eyes, one plunged into the sea, the other three remained, hurriedly vying for posts at the buoy's far end.

Unlike the whales discovered later, the sea lions found these boat people intrusive.

Ashley readied the group, explaining the gray whales' migratory patterns and the most common ways to spot the creatures which range up to 45 feet in length.

Between December and June, the whales journey 12,000 miles roundtrip between Alaska's Bering Sea and their mating waters at the tip of Baja, he said.

In 1985, some 17,000 gray whales made the trek, said Patty Warhol, spokeswoman at the American Cetacean Society in San Pedro. Warhol said estimates were difficult to confirm, though.

Whale watchers can be virtually assured a glimpse, said Veronica, a co-worker of Ashley, who presents slide shows to schoolchildren prior to their voyage. There are only "three to five days out of each season that we don't see whales," she said.

Lulled by the diesel engines of the sightseeing boats, the whales travel serenely through the waters, spouting occasionally and flashing their barnacle-covered backs.

The fact that a fleet of boats often tags along beside doesn't seem to matter.

However, on board the serenity gives way to excitement and at times, near chaos.

"What if we tip over? We are dead," said Robby Scott, one of the group of 11-year-olds from a Redlands elementary school, as the boat began to rock with the waves.

"Earthquake!" shouted Vasilios Arabatzis, moments before shrieks were heard. The terror soon gave way to giggles.

"The kids are having a better time running around and trying to hang on than they are watching," said parent Diane Creech, on her second whale watch.

"When we first got on the boat everybody headed for the

'As You Like It' given charming life in Costa Mesa

By Patrick McGreevy

The world is full of fools and lovers who are one in the same in Shakespeare's "As You Like It," given charming life at the South Coast Repertory theater through March 30.

A cast accomplished in the delivery of tongue-twisters and sharp witticisms is necessary to successfully produce this, one of Shakespeare's most lyrical and playful works.

And such a cast has been assembled on the mainstage of this Costa Mesa theater.

Trimmed to liteness and provided with an elegant setting, this "As You Like It," is a delightful production that warms as it entertains.

As one of Shakespeare's lightest and most romantic of plays, "As You Like It" is a good choice to woo a mainstream audience to "the Bard."

Orlando (David Chemel) is chased out of home by his wicked brother, Oliver (Ron Boussom), but not before he meets and falls in love with Rosalind (Monique Fowler), the daughter of the banished Duke Senior (Carl Reggiardo).

Review

Duke Frederick (Hal Landon, Jr.) has exiled his older brother out into the Forest of Arden where the wronged Duke Senior is attended by a band of merry men, whose lone exception is Jaques (Jonathan McMurtry) a soul who relishes his melancholy.

The reigning duke has kept Rosalind in court to provide company to his daughter, Celia (Anni Long) but, as this comedy opens, the duke decides Rosalind is only stealing his daughter's glory and provoking pity from loyalists to the Senior Duke.

So Rosalind also is banished and Celia, unwilling to lose a loved friend for a tyrannical father, goes with her, trailing after them Touchstone, the court Fool (Robert Machray).

In the forest of Arden, Rosalind dons the clothing of a boy and Celia takes the role of a shepherdess.

Unrecognizable, they meet Orlando, the Senior Duke and the other forest-dwellers, snackbar," said fifth grade teacher Mike Munoz. "I said, 'that's not what we came for!'"

These and other important matters seemed to take precedence over the whale watching.

"Mr. Cordova, Vascilio took my spot," said Jacob Azulay edging for a place along the crowded railing. Then he added impatiently, "I'm gonna tell."

Another intrigued whale watcher pointed beyond his teacher and said, "look at the smog!"

While many searched for the whale's distinctive spouting, others calmly waited for the big moment.

Kelly Ingenito, 10, said she was sitting down until someone else found them. However, Ingenito could easily explain just what a person could expect of a whale. "It's big, it lives in the water, it's a mammal."

Still others sat down for other reasons. The casualty count was close to 10, with queasy youngsters sprawled along available benches and laps. But with the first sightings, the real whale watching began.

"If they expect us to clap for them they better do a good show," said Arabatzis, who then demanded the whales to appear.

"There she blows!" shouted Ashley, after spotting two surfacing just off the ship's bow.

"Even if we don't see anything past this point it was definitely worth it," said Barney Cordova, also a fifth grade teacher.

Added student Andrea Reed, "It sure beats work!"

including Amiens, the balladeer accompanying the banished duke, and Audrey, the dumb innocent who takes Touchstone's heart.

But the two high-bred women decide to have fun and keep their roles while agreeing to help Orlando overcome his obsessive love for Rosalind.

The fun comes in the interweaving of a dozen diverse characters allowing mistaken identities to fuel strange romances. For instance, a shrewish shepherdess falls in love with the boy, whose role Rosalind has assumed.

"As You Like It" also is filled with song. Amiens (Benjamin Stewart) provides the occasional musical interlude singing songs to stir the melancholy in Jaques.

The Bard also mocks his own poetic writing with line after line of horrible verse concocted by the love-stricken Orlando for Rosalind.

But it is in the speeches of other characters that Shakespeare has placed the meat of the play.

Some of the wittiest and most insightful things ever said about love are spoken in "As You Like It."

Shakespeare lampoons and demystifies romance at the same time he honors it.

At one point, Rosalind playing the role of the counseling boy, decries Orlando's silliness at claiming he would die without Rosalind.

"The poor world is almost 6,000 years old, and in all this time there was not any man died in his own person, vidilcet, in a love cause ..." Rosalind as the boy, advises. "Men have died from time to time, and worms have eaten them, but not for love."

Besides the swaggering Rosalind, Shakespeare's other commentators on love include the Fool, Touchstone and the cynic, Jaques, who gives the famous speech beginning "All the world's a stage and all the men and women merely players."

So it is no wonder that the actors playing those three roles — Fowler, McMurtry and Machray — stand out for their excellence. Chemel as Orlando is also very good.

The direction by Lee Shallat is brisk and lively.

Cliff Faulkner's set beautifully resembles a large black crystal ball the first part of the play and a magical kingdom of flowing white-silk trees the second part in the forest.

This production of "As You Like It" is easily recommended.

Upland Library has handmade quilts on display

More than 20 handmade quilts are on display at the Upland Library this week as part of the Upland School District's celebration of Women's History Week.

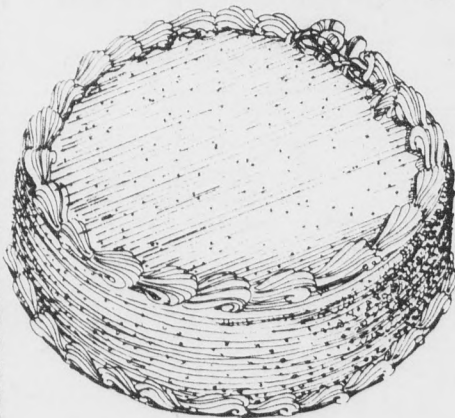

Quilts were chosen because they are "considered to be a true American woman's art," said Leila Minnis, a social studies teacher at Pioneer Junior High School and a member of the mentor teacher project which sponsored the display.

Some of the quilts are historic, dating as far back as 1820, while others have unique patterns, like one three-dimensional piece.

Each school is represented in a square in a quilt made by the Upland students' parents, Minnis said. She said that the children helped design the squares, while their parents actually made them. The center squares of that quilt depict the Madonna of the Trail, representing Upland Elementary School, the oldest in the district.

Women's History Week lasts through Saturday.

Medlin tops in gaining contributions

By Matt Coker

Also contributing to this article were Kimberly Heinrichs and Andrew Horan.

Two Ontario candidates garnered more campaign contributions than all others entered in West Valley city council races to be decided April 8, according to recently filed reports.

Beecher Medlin, who is trying to win his third four-year term on the Ontario council, led candidates in Ontario, Upland and Montclair with $11,349 in contributions.

Following closely behind was Howard Snider, running for the mayoral post he lost in Ontario 12 years ago, who collected $11,161.78 during the first filing period.

The statements, which had to be sent to city clerks' offices by midnight Thursday, list campaign contributions and expenditures from Jan. 19 to Feb. 24.

State law requires that candidates in municipal elections submit three written reports of their campaign receipts and expenses. Statements also are due March 27 and June 12.

Only Montclair council candidate Leon Gross had not filed by Monday. He told The Daily Report he missed the deadline because he believed he had "until March 27 to file."

The following is a breakdown of the statements by city.

Montclair

The mayor's post and two council seats go before voters in Montclair.

Two council candidates — incumbent Dolly Lewman and challenger Michael A. Moreno — chose to file "short forms," by which they declared "less than $500 has been received or expended" by their campaigns.

Mayoral candidates Walter H. Hackett Jr. and Nelson Gentry also filed the short forms, while Larry Rhinehart declared he gave himself $1,231 and had spent $1,125 in the most recent filing period.

Both Hackett and Rhinehart are current council members. Gentry is a former councilman.

Council candidates Leonard Paulitz, an incumbent, and Billy Allen Oldfield reported $831 and $1,130 in receipts respectively. Oldfield gave his campaign $1,000, according to his report.

Upland

In Upland, where three council seats will go before voters, candidates Wanda Kloeppel, Thomas McGilloway and incumbent Frank Carpenter collected and spent less than $500 during the first period.

Candidate Rosalie Kamansky, who currently is serving on the Planning Commission, raised $1,547, mostly from contributions from individuals.

David Rosenthal, a mortgage banker, gave $500 toward Kamansky's campaign, while Kamansky and her husband Joe contributed $350. She has spent about $260 so far.

Former councilman Albert Canestro has $959 left over from his unsuccessful bid for re-election two years ago. He has contributed more funds to his campaign and received about $200 from other sources to total $1,555. Of those funds, he has spent $595.

Ontario

If Beecher Medlin and his challenger, Bobby Little, received a vote for every dollar their campaigns have collected, it would be no contest.

Language development specialist Little is remaining silent when it comes to asking for contributions in his quest to unseat Medlin.

Little, who pulled out of the 1984 council race, filed a short form declaring he has no campaign committee and will neither spend nor receive $500 or more during the entire calendar year.

Medlin received total contributions of $11,349, of which $3,201 was spent for a fund-raiser held during the first filing period.

The Ontario Firefighters Local 1430 led contributors by giving $1,350 to Medlin's campaign.

Medlin also received $525 from Hardy Strozier, a Costa Mesa development consultant working for Robertson Homes, which hopes to build apartments within the controversial Archibald Ranch development south of Ontario's current borders.

Medlin, who owns gas stations, also received $500 apiece from Mohammed Seirafi, a builder from Hacienda Heights, White's Black Gold, an Ontario gasoline and oil distributor, and the Lusk Family of Companies, an Irvine-based real estate development firm.

Ambulance providers also delivered a big chunk of funds to Medlin's campaign. Trans-Medical president Homer Aerts, company manager Don Reed and Steve Dickmeyer of Mercy Ambulance in Fontana gave Medlin $212.50 each.

The Woodland Hills law firm headed by Timothy Sabo, who is the redevelopment agency attorney for both Ontario and Fontana, gave Medlin's campaign $250, as did Richard McElvany, owner of an Ontario insurance agency and chairman of the Howard Snider for Mayor Committee.

Speaking of Snider, his campaign for the city's top elected post received monetary contributions of $9,261.78 and pledges of $1,900 for a total of $11,161.78 during the first filing period.

The former mayor's committee spent a total of $4,411.14 during the filing period and racked up another $3,101.94 in accrued expenses to wind up with total expenditures of $7,513.08. The

Children responding to reading

By Andrew Horan

In a time when schoolchildren are increasingly attuned to television viewing, two Central School parents have instituted a voluntary reading program they say is "radical."

"Surprise!" said Linda Eddy, who conceived the idea. Children from kindergarten through the sixth grade enthusiastically embraced the voluntary, extracurricular reading program, she said.

"We thought of the name because 'radical' is the kids' latest cool word," Eddy explained. "But since then, we've decided it's kind of a radical approach to teaching reading."

Eddy, along with fellow parent Linda Wald, designed the program and proposed it to principal Andre Sauvageau, who readily accepted it.

"We wanted to reach as many kids as we could," Eddy said during an interview in the school's conference room.

To increase participation, Eddy said, she realized the project should be "non-competitive and enjoyable for the children."

More than half of the 582 Central students participated in the program during November, December and January.

At the beginning of each month, children submitted a form that detailed their goals for the number of books and pages to be read that month.

Students who met or exceeded that goal were rewarded with a certificate, stickers, pencils and erasers. Children who participated but fell short of their goals earned a certificate for trying, Eddy said.

Children who met their goals in all three months earned a free pizza from Straw Hat Pizza in Alta Loma.

More than 290 children participated in the program, Eddy said, and 147 met their goals for each of the three months. In total, students read more than 189,000 pages in 3,141 books.

Titles "ran the whole gamut," Eddy said.

She displayed a list bearing book titles such as "Old Mother Hubbard," "Never Talk to Strangers," "Jesus is Alive Again (Adaptation from the Bible)," and the "A-Team" and "G.I. Joe" comic books.

Regardless of what the children read, the program's biggest benefit transcended school walls, Eddy said.

Children recommended books to each other, and "we found that a lot of the parents were taking the time to read to their kids," she said.

The telephone therapy will be a short-term crisis intervention approach. Referrals will be made for individuals exhibiting serious dysfunctions.

Telephone lines will be open from 7 to 9 p.m. seven days a week. The telephone number is (818) 893-2695.

LeRoy Boys' Home

Dean Lewis, operator of Scotts Dairy Stores in Chino, Corona and Pomona, is the new president of the LeRoy Boys' Home Board of Directors.

Serving with him for the coming year are Royce Stutzman, vice president/finance; Carolyn Soper, vice president/public relations; Dr. Doug Lobb, secretary; and Reid Shannon, treasurer.

Five new directors were elected to the LeRoy board. They are Clifton L. Allen; William B. Allen; Lou Cassani; Douglas E. Hamilton; and Molly Johnson.

Outgoing LeRoy board president Stanley R. Barnes was recognized for his dedicated service with the home's highest honor, the Order of the Door Knob, a plaque highlighted by a crystal knob taken from one of LeRoy's original buildings.

Also recognized for their service during the past year were committee chairpersons, Soper, membership/nominating; Fred Freehling, personnel; Stutzman, finance; Shannon, thrift stores; and Cassani, fund raising.

Barnes, former La Verne Mayor Frank Johnson and Los Angeles County Superior Court Judge James Piatt were acknowledged as outgoing directors.

Eric Burton and Anna Norton were named honorary life members of the board.

Special awards were presented to Americana Restaurant; Campfire, Inc.; the Claremont Junior Women's Club; the Claremont Kiwanis Club; Denny's Restaurant, Glendora; the Friends of Foster Children; the La Verne/San Dimas Junior Women's Club; the Optimist Club of Pomona; the Perkin-Elmer Employees' Association; the Pomona Host Lions Club; the Pomona Valley Corvette Association; and Pomona First Federal Savings and Loan Association.

A.L. Newcomers

Incoming and outgoing officers of the Alta Loma Newcomers recently were honored at a luncheon at the Ontario Hilton.

Officers honored for their work during the past year were president Leslie Marantz; vice presidents Eileen Burken and Peggy Damien; secretary Wanda Mitchell; and treasurer Rose Palesek.

Also honored were new officers, president, Linda Morrison and vice president, Phyllis Kuyendall.

Women living in the Alta Loma area are invited to meet new friends at the monthly coffee.

The next monthly coffee will be today at 10:30 a.m. For more information, call 945-5522 or 987-9922.

Cancer screening

A special screening clinic is being offered for women age 45 years old and older by the San Bernardino County Department of Public Health Friday from 8:30 to 11:30 a.m. at the Ontario Public Health Department, 320 E. D St.

The group has moved to a new location, Kaiser Recreation Hall, 9400 Cherry Ave., Fontana, Calif. (Large hall, hardwood floor, good acoustics, and air conditioning.) For more information call (714) 874-4422, (714) 820-1228 or (714) 627-3723.

SINGER LIQUIDATION

The news is out — radio, TV and the papers have been full of it — Singer is changing. After first selling out all their company stores and closing nearly all their factories, Singer will now spin off the sewing business to a subsidiary and pursue aerospace contracts & other interests.

I started in the sewing machine business in 1955, have been on Foothill in Claremont since 1968, and have been a Singer dealer for seven years. Last year we became a Showcase Dealer for Singer — that means that we are one of the few locations where you can find Singer's complete line. Our walls are bulging with Singers, so we're forced to make sacrifices to get rid of this stock. We must clean them out to the walls!

SO WE'RE OFFERING:

SOME SOME MODELS BELOW COST

SOME MODELS AT COST

SOME MODELS NEAR COST

Here is just a few of the outstanding bargains in this clearance:

Model 15NL

You won't wear this dependable old favorite. Brand new head only

$68<sup>88</sup>

Model 2010

Singer's famous memory machine that makes pattern selection as easy as touching a picture, and makes buttonholes automatically to the size of your button. Singer's suggested price $139.99. Our clearance price BELOW COST at:

$649<sup>50</sup>

Model 247

Singer popular zigzag machine ready to drop into your cabinet or portable case. Singer's suggested list price $209.99. Our clearance price:

$99<sup>99</sup>

School Model 1280

These heavy-duty machines were made to stand up to school use. Automatic buttonholer and 16 stitches for plenty of versatility. PRICE CUT TO LESS THAN HALF! Suggested list $519.99, clearance priced at:

$288<sup>78</sup>

Model 6267 & 6268

Singer's new "Ultimate Miracle" machines. Come in for a price quotation on these models.

Prices slashed on

USED SINGER MACHINES

Singer machines have brought a premium price because of their name. We will not cut those prices in half, with machines now priced from $29.95

BUT WHAT ABOUT PARTS?

Good question! Singer will, of course, fulfill their 25 year warranties as they are legally obliged to do. And when that runs out, other manufacturers will produce popular parts just as they now do for older Singers.

AND WHAT ABOUT SERVICE?

Another good question! We're not discounters who sell and forget you. And after all these years, we're not about to fold up and slip out of town. On the contrary, we expect our business to continue its brisk growth as we continue to offer other fine sewing and vacuum products, as well as service on all makes and models, including Singers

Scots are underway

Bouyed by eight returning starters, Upland High School will be out to improve on its third place Baseline League finish of a year ago, and hopefully return to the title room.

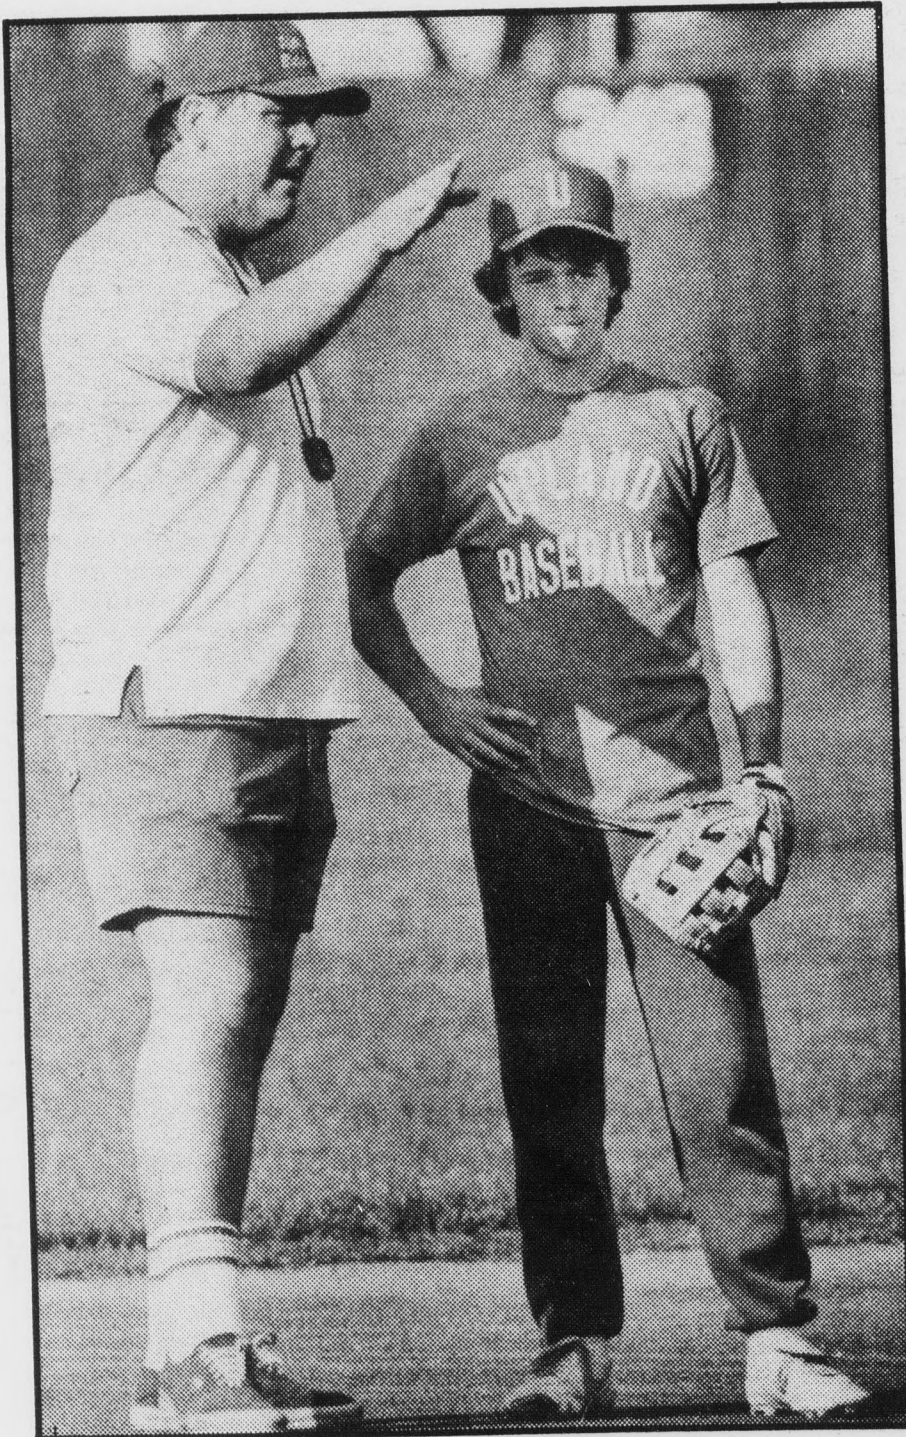

Coach Mike Alonso, returning for his third year at the helm, saw the Scots post a 13-11 overall record last year, but a 9-5 Baseline mark. In two years, Alonso is 32-17.

Upland is currently playing in the Chaffey District Tournament. The Highlanders opened Wednesday afternoon against Montclair.

Returning starters include seniors Buddy Mitchell (catcher), Adam Koontz (designated hitter), Ed Russom (outfield) and Tom Vondran (outfield); juniors Bob Sheridan (infield), Greg Fiorindo (shortstop), Roy Fernandez (second base) and Tim Albert (infield).

Additionally, junior Shawn Aeschliman (outfield) saw enough action last season to learn a varsity letter.

Promising newcomers for Upland this season include sophomores Buddy McGown and Jason Fagondes, both utility players.

Mike Alonso will return for his third year at the helm of the Upland High School squad.

Marathon song puts Boyer on center stage

LOS ANGELES — Business is moving at a sprinter's pace these days in the cramped and paper-strewn headquarters of the first-ever Los Angeles Marathon.

Crowded into four donated rooms on the third floor of a Los Angeles International Airport hotel, marathon volunteers are hustling to finish the paperwork before the start of the 26.2-mile race Sunday. In one day recently, the volunteers received 1,001 applications from marathoners-in-waiting.

Runners from 42 states and 22 foreign countries will vie for the $325,000 in prizes when the gun sounds Sunday. Top-ranked runners recruited for the competition include Olympic medalists Frank Shorter and Rod Dixon as well as 1985 U.S. National Marathon Champion Nancy Ditz.

Among those already entered is John Boyer of Rancho Cucamonga. Although Boyer is not in the class of either Shorter or Dixon, he'll probably receive as much pre-race attention.

Boyer is primarily a triathlete. He's competed in the prestigious Ironman Triathlon in Hawaii twice and is running Sunday's marathon as part of his training for the Oct. 18 event.

"The only time I've run a marathon is after 112 miles on a bike," said Boyer, director of sales and marketing for Lewis Homes in Upland. "I did it in 4½ hours and I didn't feel that was too bad."

Boyer will be seen on KCBS/Channel 2 Friday night at 7:30 p.m. singing an original composition for the marathon. It'll be along the same lines as his first running song, which will be aired during the telecast of the marathon by KCOP/Channel 13.

"I've got the wrong color, slow-twitching, muscle-fiber, minimal oxygen uptake blues," is Boyer's calling card, a parody on the terms runners use when talking about their efforts.

"I've been putting in 40 miles a week," Boyer said, "and strictly adhere to my Hostess cup cake, chocolate chip diet."

Obviously Boyer's sense of humor has aided in his training, but most of the other runners will be very serious.

The organizers say they hope the event will rival the annual marathons held in New York City, Boston and Chicago. Last year, New York had nearly 16,000 finishers in its race, Chicago fielded 7,600 runners and Boston had 4,400.

Some 2.5 million people line the race route in New York, making it the largest single spectator event in the world.

"I'd like to see Los Angeles be as big as the New York marathon," said Los Angeles Marathon president William Burke, who was commissioner of tennis for the 1984 Olympic Games. "We're awaiting certification as the largest first-year marathon in the country."

With applications still flowing in, 7,100 runners had already signed up as of Monday to run in the Los Angeles race — a mark not reached by the New York marathon until its 10th year. The entry fee for the Los Angeles event is $15.

Mercedes-Benz will award cars to the male and female winners. Each of them will also be handed $10,000 in cash, two round-trip airline tickets to the destination of the winner's choice and cameras.

Participants will start and finish at the Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum, scene of the 1984 Olympics. The race course differs from the Olympic one and is mapped to highlight Los Angeles' cultural and historic roots. It runs through the ethnic settlements of Little Tokyo, Chinatown and Olvera Street in downtown Los Angeles.

The marathon was proposed by City Council members who said it would recapture some of the spirit of the Olympics, bring in tourist dollars and give the sprawling city a stronger sense of identity.

To foot the marathon's $3 million bill, organizers are following the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee's successful formula of signing exclusive sponsorship and licensing agreements with major corporations. Seventeen sponsors and licensees have been signed up.

However, Burke conceded that the event will probably post a loss of about $150,000 this year. He predicted it will break even next year and prove profitable in its 1988 edition.

Despite the dozens of big-name runners competing in the race, Burke predicted an unknown will win.

"You never know," said Burke, "who ever heard of Orlando Pizzolato before he won the (1985) New York City marathon?"

committee started the second period with $4,850.64 on hand.

Of Snider's expenses, the most, $1,485.06, went to a San Dimas advertising firm for campaign literature costs. The committee also paid Upland resident Norman Turnette $1,000 and Inland Valley Public Relations in Upland $300 for "professional management and consulting services."

The top contributions raised by Snider's campaign were $800 each from the Ontario Firefighters Association and Security Management, an Ontario property management firm owned by local developers George Voigt and Ted Dutton. Dutton, along with local developer Jim Smirl, California Commerce Center manager David Ariss and automobile dealer Charles Leggio of Mark Christopher Chevrolet in Ontario also pledged $475 each to Snider.

Other contributors were: Klein Industries of Ontario ($500); Gemmel Pharmacy Group ($400); Crean & Schack Insurance Brokers in Ontario ($300); and Western States Development Co. of Ontario and A.H. Reiter Development Co. of Irvine ($250 each).

Snider also received several contributions ranging from $100 to $200, and those giving the funds were everyone from local businessmen to the San Francisco-based BankAmerica Corp.

Of Snider's contributions, Armando Navarro, the professor-administrator-activist challenging the former mayor for the four-year post, said "There is an arrogance of power being demonstrated by developers through the candidacy of Howard Snider."

Snider responded this morning by saying, "I certainly don't question the integrity of the people who are contributing to my campaign because I've known most of these people a good many years, since I've lived in the city a good 30 years."

Navarro, who is taking his first crack at political office, collected $2,189 from supporters and loans of $690 to open up with a $2,879 war chest during the first filing period. But his committee spent $2,441 for campaign literature and general overhead by the time the period closed.

Navarro's biggest contribution, $500, came from the Hod Carriers & Laborers Union Local 783, a San Bernardino-based association representing construction workers.

First-time candidate Robert Quincey, who is fighting it out with three others for a two-year council seat, received $1,000 more than Navarro during the first period.

Of the $3,950.84 in contributions Quincey received, $295.84 were non-monetary in nature. The Friends of Robert Quincey committee spent $121.90 for balloons and opened the second period with $3,533.10 on hand.

Quincey's largest contribution, $800, came from Andrew Minorini, the fixed base operator at Van Nuys Airport, which is where Quincey served as airport manager before assuming the same post at Ontario International Airport in 1979. He recently retired as manager of Los Angeles International Airport.

Quincey received $500 apiece from Ontario Aircraft Service and IPS Services in Redlands. Everyone from local businessmen to a retired Van Nuys judge gave Quincey's campaign between $25 and $250.

Rudy Favila, who is seeking the office he got beat out of by former councilman Gus Skropos two years ago, received contributions of $1,575. Favila's committee spent $284.62 to leave $1,329.55 on hand by the beginning of the second period.

Only contributions more than $100 must be listed, and the treatment team supervisor at the Youth Training School in Chino received two large ones: $1,000 from Fiesta Motors in Ontario and $500 from Ontario dairyman Jack Pinheiro.

Loyal Nixon received contributions of $1,410, and had spent $668 by the time the period closed. The political consultant, who ran for council unsuccessfully in 1980, gave himself $500 and received contributions less than $100 totaling $419.

His committee also listed $491 worth of research services contributed to Nixon's campaign by D.L.B. Associates in Montclair.

Jim Bowman, a firefighter and local businessman who is taking his third shot at the council after two unsuccessful tries, listed no contributions nor expenditures during the initial filing period.

Upland council rejects church/school's bid

By Kimberly Heinrichs

Life Bible Fellowship's bid for a revamped church/school complex on 19th Street was rejected by the Upland City Council Monday.

Gary Keith, administrator for the fellowship, presented revised plans for the complex, to be located in the Great Western Rose Co. building, in response to stricter permit requirements and concerns of nearby residents.

But in a 4-0 vote with Councilman Frank Hoover absent, the council voted to uphold the residents' appeal of the Planning Commission's earlier approval and deny the project.

The council held two public hearings on the matter because the school part of the plan required a special conditional use permit. If the fellowship decides to build a church only on the property, the city will have less power to block it because it will not require the special permit.

Neighbors have indicated that the school, with the traffic it would bring and the danger to students of open flood ditches was their main concern. Although they did not specifically protest the church, they would prefer that the surrounding area was developed with single-family homes like their own, they said.

When the fellowship first applied for its permit for the church and school to be built on the 10-acre lot between Campus and Euclid avenues last fall, the Planning Commission approved it despite neighbor protest.

Along with that approval the commission allowed the fellowship to have its complex 10 feet back from the road, rather than the usual 20 feet, so it could locate in the present warehouse.

Residents appealed the commission's approval to the council, complaining of traffic and environmental problems, as well as the short setback.

The council put off the decision until Monday — shortly before the fellowship would have closed escrow on the property — in order to study the entire area and try to work out a traffic agreement with the California Department of Transportation. However, it warned the fellowship that it would require the 20-foot setback after all.

In response to the residents' charges that traffic on 19th Street, which also is State Route 30, was so heavy that it backed up on the two-lane road for several blocks during rush hours, the city planning and engineering staff searched for solutions.

Since it is a state highway, Caltrans would be involved and it has expressed initial reluctance to spend money on the project, according to Upland Mayor Richard Anderson.

Although Keith indicated that the fellowship would scale back the school to include only pre-school and elementary students, and that it would not begin classes until a traffic solution was worked out, the council felt it would be leaving too much to chance.

"That puts this council in a position that I think is extremely difficult. It is gazing into a crystal ball," Anderson said. "I would not presume to put some future council in this posture."

Keith said later that the council's rejection nullifies his organization's sale contract for the property. He said he will propose negotiating a new contract in order to build just a church to the church board and then the 600-member congregation.

"If those two are a go, then we will try and buy the property again," he said.

The property will be worth less, he said, because the fellowship would have to cut 16 feet off the building's front. That expensive maneuver would make it conform to the 20-foot setback requirement, he said.

The council took no action on the 16-page report compiled by staff on long term planning for the area bordered by Euclid and Campus avenues and 18th and 19th streets.

The council-ordered report suggested re-directing Route 30 north at or about Campus Avenue to the proposed Foothill Freeway alignment north of 19th Street, as well as some revision of the flood control systems.

It also suggested that the council put off any decisions on special permits for property in that area until another study can be made.

The council has given no indication as to when it will discuss the future study, which would look at between $2 and $3 million in improvements material bond in an amount equal to one hundred per cent (100%) of the contract price, and a faithful performance bond in an amount equal to one hundred percent (100%) of the contract price, said bonds to be secured from a surety company satisfactory to the Board of Supervisors.

No bidder may withdraw his bid for a period of sixty (60) days after the date set for the opening thereof.

Bidders may submit with their bids a sworn statement of their financial responsibility, technical ability and experience. Such sworn statement may be required to be furnished before award is made to any particular bidder.

The contractor, if selected, agrees to enter into contract with San Bernardino County in which he will conform with all Federal Labor Standard Provisions of the Davis-Bacon and related acts and Contract Work Hours Standard Act, as set forth in Title 29, Subtitle A, of the Code of Federal Regulations, and with any changes therein that may occur during the course of construction or as set forth in any current publication of the Federal Register, describing decisions and modifications therein governing the Southern California area.

Notice is hereby given that the successful bidder who is awarded the contract may avail himself of Government Code Section 4590 which allows substituted securities to be deposited in lieu of retention payments withheld to insure performance.

Pursuant to the statutes of the State of California Labor Code Section 1773.2, the general prevailing rate of wages and rates for legal holiday and overtime work shall conform to the general prevailing wage determinations made by the Director of Industrial Relations, and with any changes therein that may occur during the course of construction. Copies of said prevailing rates of per diem wages are on file at the office of the Division.

Contractors are required to comply with the San Bernardino County Affirmative Action Compliance Program. Prior to the award of contract, contractors must complete their affirmative action plan, together with certain other information and assurances. The bid documents include information regarding the program. Additional information may be obtained from the Affirmative Action/Contract Compliance Officer, General Services Agency, 200 South Lena Road, San Bernardino, CA 92415, telephone (714) 387-2243.

The Board of Supervisors reserves the right to reject any or all bids, and to waive technical errors and discrepancies and/or waive any informality of a bid not affected by law, if to do so seems to best serve the public interest.

By order of the Board of Supervisors of the County of San Bernardino. Dated at San Bernardino, California, February 24, 1986.
